

When I was younger the son of my cousin had this kirby game for the gameboy SP called Kirby & the Amazing Mirror. I recall how i loved playing that game with him and always did want to own the game for myself because of how fun it looked. The different kirby's in the game and abilities one could aquire always fascinated me and really intrigued me due to them allowing different types of gamestyles and making such a simple change so much more fun and diverse. Needless to say i never did own the game but everytime i think of kirby thats the first game that pops into my head.
